Titan. 1 Paperback(s), 2014. soft. Book Condition: New. In 1892 London a well-guarded young nobleman goes missing under distressing circumstances, in this fifth mystery in Michael Kurland's Edgar Awardwinning series (following The Empress of India). The nobleman, one Baron Renfrew, is actually Prince Albert Victor, eldest grandson of Queen Victoria, and he disappeared while visiting a house of ill repute, leaving behind a bodyguard who was knocked out cold and the body of a bound and brutally murdered young woman. Hoping to find the missing prince and clear him of the crime, the royal family had intended to employ Sherlock Holmes, out of the country and so, at the suggestion of Mycroft Holmes, they turn to the only man who just might be more brilliant, Professor James Moriarty, currently awaiting re-trial on charges of murder. "Kurland has made Moriarty more interesting than Doyle ever made Holmes," noted Isaac Asimov of this brilliant, charming, resourceful, ambitious, and determined anti-hero. And though Holmes dubbed him "the Napoleon of crime," Moriarty himself is as likely to call his more famous nemesis "the Javert of busybodies," while slipping back and forth across the line of criminality in pursuit of his own enigmatic agenda. "In Kurland's latest tale of Professor James Moriarty, Sherlock Holmes once again takes a back seat to his historic nemesis as they battle sinister assassins to keep Victoria on the English throne. The plotters are too subtle to target the Queen directly. Instead, they're implicating her beloved but wild grandson, Prince Albert Victor, in a series of outrages they're actually committing themselves. Hence Baron Renfrew, whom all parties concerned believe to be the prince, disappears after stabbing and disemboweling Rose, née Elsbeth Hooten, one of the young ladies who entertain gentlemen of means at Mollie Cobby's establishment. The same grisly fate befalls..."
