Not illustrated. 1853 Excerpt: .found, after he had gone above the clouds for some distance, that he was 3,220 feet above the ground. He descended 320 feet, and reached the clouds. How far were the clouds from the earth? 151. How far would they have been from the earth, if he had had to descend 420 feet before reaching them? - 152. If a boy does 5 sums in subtraction a day, he will do 150 in 30 days. Suppose there are 55 school days in his quarter, how many days will there be left for other work? MULTIPLICATION. I. Multiplication by any number from 1 to 6. The work of learning the Multiplication Table may be much lightened for the pupil by dividing it into sections, so that one limited and definite portion of it may be learned at a time. The table is accordingly given, in the following exercises, in three sections, and the examples for practice which follow each section require only a knowledge of that section. If the pupils are very young, it maybe best to take first a still smaller portion of the table than that which is here given, as the first section; as for instance, as far as to four times four, or even three times three. Whatever part is thus assigned, the pupils should be directed to study it for a time, and then to shut their books and make the table upon their slates, as far as possible from memory....
